George W. Cartis, Nog., wrote of CLARKE'S TOODLES CLARKE'S TOODLES Mr. Clarke is a dramatic artist of unquestionable itius. The purity of his comedy is as remarkable as ame quality in Dickens or Irvina. It is not clouded in a moral purpose; it is fun for the safter uman that the moral effect is sag is its naturalness, quality of this gentleman of seenius, but a genus of the perception. There are but two scenes in that the first you, who have been used to Burton's clouse it is the na nearms of seenius, but a genus of the perception. There are but two scenes in that then. The first is the interview between Mr. and Mrs. deles and the sailor; the other is the dranken scene. the first you, who have been used to Burton's chouse extravaganza, will be so surprised and de- thed to find that it is possible to give an equally ad and entirely new rendering of the filmsy rit, will look on with sober and incredulous amuse- nit. Mr. Clarke's Toodles is unspeakably droll, aching ageny of merriment which overpowers him— too makes him bend and double binself with his back the audience, while every particle of his Irame is as ink with laushfer as it is in the next scene with tor, is one of the most comical scenes conceivable, in he is the best drunken man that was ever seen. re is a law even in the whim and incapacity of in- ciation, and Mr. Clarke's Toodles is strictly bound by it beats the eloquent Gough with his own weapons, reame eventing he played the tarmer in "Speed the agn.' PLYMOUTH PRAYER MEETING. The Bridge Between Earth and Heaven.

Plymouth lecture room was even more crowded than usual last evening. After the usual exercises Mr. Beecher said:—It would be extraordinary to say that heaven would not be so useful when we get there as it is while we are here; and yet if we did say so there would be truth in it. Whatever may be that estate, and we have but fittle knowledge, we are left without any doubt that we will meet with transcendent sympathy and compassion, that we will be in the society of just men made perfect, the concition in which we are by moral sensibility lifted into intimate communion with God. In the other life we come into connection, not with that which is unchangeable, but with that which has no relation to anything else. Now, to hold heaven up as the antithesis of hell, as the only way to escape being scorched, is a low, coarse, uncultivated idea. We think of heaven often as a refuge for the inquietudes and disturbances of this life, and to a certain extent it is right, But reinge for the inquietues and disturbates we have it is right, But let us try to keep before as continually this last rest of the spirit, this home of the soul, by living in the presence of it every day; let us feel that we shall reach there a condition of true symbathy and manhood, a condition feel that we shall meat food face to face it is whoily joyful in the noblest associations, a condition in which we shall meet God face to face and have the consciousness that we are like Him. Inve in this thought and the living will not be so hard. The great object of Divine Providence is to build manhood in us, the apostic says. Let every one of us please his neighbor. Let the whole spirit and effuence of life be to create happiness in your neighbor for his good, his permanent good; and in the constant thought of the life to come, when we meet with sorrows and dimentics here, we should think not how soon shall get over these troubles and get to heaven; but how shall I bear this trial, so as to be fit for neaven? There is a great difference in these states of mind. "Noblesse oblige" is a great proverb. Now there are a great many things we ought to do because we are beirs of heaven. We belong to the company of the Redeemer. Say, "I am the child of heaven, sent away to school, and I am going back again soon, and when I am in Zion before God I will not be found unworthy." Now in this life we undertake to vindicate our vanity and affection. Live with this thought. How shall I seem better to my God how shall I see how the side our of the noise and dust. What I want is to keep will be one to w let us try to keep before us continually
